

Words weave magic

As a parent, you strive to help your children reach their full potential. And you may already sense the powerful influence that language has on your children's confidence and self-esteem.

Yet, you may wonder how to communicate when your three-year old (or your 13-year old!) talks back or ignores your repeated requests. Sometimes you may feel like you missed the training for the most important job in your life!

Now, you can learn how to speak and respond more effectively. You will discover that simple changes in your language can create dramatic change in your family.

The Language of Parenting will guide you to a deeper connection with yourself and your family using language as the catalyst. Classes, coaching, and workshops for parents, educators, individuals and couples are offered regularly.

Janet Allison

B.S. cum laude Elementary Education,
University of Maine

As a social visionary, Janet believes that we can change the world when we change our language. Her passion is helping others use language as a catalyst to make positive change in their lives. As a Teacher and Life Coach, Janet delights in guiding people as they increase their confidence and discover new capabilities, deepening their connections with the people they love.

Janet is the Mom of two grown daughters, who continue to be her greatest teachers. She believes that children require us to work in the area that may be the hardest — looking in the mirror — and truly seeing ourselves, acknowledging our shortcomings and applauding our successes as we strive to improve everyday.

She encourages you to take care of yourself, learn and practice new skills, and then relax and enjoy life, because this is not a dress rehearsal!
